Steyer, a California business magnate who became a top Democratic donor after spending $74 million in 2012, will pull his cash and get into the air with a 120-second web ad that will start running Monday. It marks the first time Steyer has run an ad during the actual campaign — a point some of his allies said makes his appeal more potent than a typical Facebook post. The 60-second ad will hit Facebook and YouTube, run by a digital firm called targetusa.com, which specializes in voter targeting.
