Building Buildings Beyond the World's Best Universities: A New Perspective on. Comparison of the use of a thermophilic versus a mesophilic anaerobic digestion system to improve biogas production. The use of a thermophilic digestion system to enhance biogas production from organic-rich wastewater was studied by treating wastewater from an anaerobic bioreactor (mesophilic digestion system) at 50 degrees C and collecting the influent and effluent biogas to compare the effect of thermophilic digestion on biogas production. The results indicate that the thermophilic digestion system was a more efficient biogas production system than the mesophilic digestion system. The average conversion efficiency of the wastewater treatment systems was 98.2% and 79.2%, and the average biogas volume was 0.5 m³/t of influent organic carbon of the mesophilic and thermophilic digestion systems, respectively. Also, the average heat emission rate of the thermophilic digestion system was 0.25 kWh/t of influent organic carbon. I have a site where a user can pick up various items from our company. My current use case is a table where a user picks up items, then goes to the order page where they can add the item to an order. What I'd like to do is set it up so that when they check out, they can click a "Time and Date Pickup" link, then if they move onto the order page, the existing item that they picked up will show up and be used in the order. This is for tracking the time of pickup and the date of pickup. Here's my code so far for that page: So when I click the link to go to the order page, I'd like the f.datetime_select :pickup_date_time value to be the f.label :pickup_date_time value from the "Time and Date Pickup" page. Here are the models for this: Pickup Model: class Pickup
