Rescuers are searching the wreckage of a plane that crashed near Mount Merapi in Riau, Indonesia, on Sunday. Indonesia's National Search and Rescue Agency said the search is suspended until at least Tuesday. Visibility is poor after the volcanic eruption, Indonesia's National Search and Rescue Agency said in a statement. Saturday's accident was among at least 11 airplane crashes in Indonesia that have raised suspicion of mechanical problems or pilot error, highlighting the potential risks for travelers in the world's largest archipelago. Aircraft data and voice recordings from Saturday's accident are being analyzed, the agency said, adding that there was no confirmation of any report of foul play or any survivors. Most of the wreckage was recovered Saturday night. Passengers made distress calls, but rescue personnel could not locate them. The agency said local residents in the area were not evacuated. The plane was carrying 28 passengers and three crew members. There were no reports of injuries on the ground. Worried that they might be trapped by the eruption, people living in the area also rushed to the rescue, local people said. "Last night people believed that the plane was still there. I heard a sound and ran there to see what I could do to help," said a villager in the area, who gave his name as Abdul. He added that the plane crashed in a ravine. "We think at least 10 people died. The plane has been burnt, its tail is broken," he said, adding that he tried to save the people on board but he could not get close to the wreckage. Mount Merapi on Java island, central Java, erupted at around 4:40 a.m. Saturday. It is one of about 300 volcanoes in Indonesia, the world's most active archipelago, and the most active volcanic region in the world outside
