You also can use Photoshop Elements. To learn more about it, see Book III, Chapter 4. Creating a new document If you have layers already created, you can easily add new layers to a document. It's also possible to create a new document by selecting the New Document button at the top of the Layers panel. Layers go in and out of a document at the user's discretion. You can find the New Layer option in the layers panel's Layers window; or in Bridge, click the New Layer button; or from the Edit menu in the Layers panel, choose New Layer. Figure 6-1 illustrates how to do this. **Figure 6-1:** Click the New Layer button in the Layers panel to create a new layer in the current document. Editing a layer A layer is a saved image file that contains the pixels of an image. It is what enables you to create, edit, and modify the image as you see fit. You can manipulate layers to change colors, and apply effects to the color or other individual layers. Layers are grouped to create folders; when one layer is placed in a folder, it becomes a sublayer. So, as the figure on the left in Figure 6-2 shows, the red layer became a sublayer of the blue, yellow, and green layers. You can access the layers in the sublayers of a folder by clicking the plus (+) sign next to the folder name. **Figure 6-2:** Layers can be grouped in folders to organize and edit your files. The following sections tell you what else you can do to organize, modify, or otherwise make use of the layers in your images. Grouping layers into folders A folder is a collection of layers and is a way to organize your image. You can create an empty folder, name it, and then click the plus sign (+) next to it and add to the folder as many layers as you'd like. (Be careful, though, because a layer can't be removed from the folder once you add it.) Grouping your layers by color can make them easier to find, as you can see on the right in Figure 6-2. In this example, I've grouped the red, blue, yellow, and green layers into four folders (dotted squares) named Red, Blue, Yellow, and Green. If you're making a color-

Q: QGIS form: How to simplify/limit number of fields to be searchable in a combobox of a fieldset? I have created a line layer, and a fieldset in one of its attribute table that only has the fields from the external shapefile (which represents a road). Both are edited in QGIS. I want to search the line layer by clicking the "Search for" button in the fieldset. This "Search for" button opens a combobox that only has the fields that I select from the shapefile. However, as I only have 2 fields to work with, I'd like the combobox to only have two fields, and the fieldset to only have two fields. Is that possible? A: A simpler option would be to add a button in the bottom of the attributes of the attributes table then add the relevant button action that enables the search button (see below). The button action would be: from qgis.utils import iface iface.addWizardSelectionButton('SEARCH', 'Search for [your search field]', ', ', 'line', 'Route') iface.addWizardSelectionButton('SEARCH', 'Search for [you search field]', ', ', 'line', 'Origin') iface.addWizardSelectionButton('SEARCH', 'Search for [you search field]', ', ', 'line', 'Destination') Refer to: Edit To incorporate the answer provided by MattiasK as well it would be: iface.addWizardSelectionButton('SEARCH', 'Search for [your search field]', ', ', 'line', 'OUTFIELD', ', ') Refer to:
