What's new:

TV's Launching the Way for Streaming Music Groove City TV's co-founders, Nathan Webster and Steve Jenkins, want to stream all your music to you. In the age of iTunes Radio, Spotify, and Pandora, streamed radio has become like tap water: everyone is taking a big gulp. But two Brattleboro, Vermont, brothers, Jenkins and Webster, want to take a bigger swig than everyone else. Their self-described company "pushes the envelope further by providing real-time availability of live and recorded music to anyone with an Internet connection," according to their press release. Their vision is streaming online radio the way it used to be—six songs at a time, played in your home, by you, and cheaper. This may be music's first streaming service you won't have to keep on hooking up to a computer after every song stops. "Our goal has always been to revolutionize the way that music can be enjoyed; streaming is just part of that," Jenkins told Wired.com when we talked about the idea for our forthcoming streaming columns. "Making this streaming accessible — what we're doing at Grove City TV — is like what Napster did for the music industry in the '90s, but this time it's happening for the average consumer. It's finally a simple streaming service where you can instantly discover and enjoy music." (Watch the announcement video at right.) Jenkins — who co-authored the song "My Jealousy (On Fire)" with then bandmate Stevie Nicks — continued, "[It's] streaming as a service — an app that's like Netflix for music. You just open it and start playing. You can browse on a channel basis and only follow certain artists. The idea is to create the equivalent of a WOW Channel in the home — the place where your friends hang out and where you stop by to chat. This is more like the 'real' Internet (i.e., the Internet before the dot-com bust in 2000) because nothing else ever came close in the way of the user experience." Streaming music with is certainly an elegant one, but what will it look like in your house? "We've hit on a design that is identical across any kind of installation," Webster explained. "You're going to be sitting on a couch in the house, maybe in your kitchen, and on your TV screen you'll see an icon with six stations and you hit a

Apotheon, an enigmatic artifact, will start a chain reaction that only the four nations of antiquity could stop. Just a few years after the death of Zeus, the Gods are furious that mankind has betrayed their power and they will start a bloody war. The people are desperate, and now there are conspirators among them who try to stop the Gods. In the middle of the conflict, the Gods hide the first signs of a new enemy... The reward for mankind is the only hope they have of survival and, therefore, the main emphasis has been put on the fighting. The gameplay has been improved and features legendary warriors from Greek mythology such as Achilles, Odysseus, Herakles and Theseus. The story is easy to follow, easy to control and even though you fight against the gods and monsters, the narrative stays close to the historical context of the times, ignoring the fictional elements. The only dramatic moments of the story are the actual battles against the gods but just as in "Legacy of the Forgotten Gods", the game has a gentle tone and the main story is the quest to become a hero. Features Classic Fighting Gameplay - Apotheon follows the classic fighting games of the 90's such as Streets of Rage. The control scheme of the game has been streamlined, and the characters have been revamped to use more modern combat techniques such as the new attack button and the crouching mechanic. Easy to Learn and Immersive Controls - The controls are easy to learn with a very simplistic and intuitive fighting engine. You can move, execute special attacks and block. The overhead view gives you a better view of the fighting and lets you see your opponent's health and pressure. Upgraded Visuals - The graphics of Apotheon have been completely overhauled and the visuals create a cinematic atmosphere. The game was recently released in Japan on the PlayStation Vita, and the port was brought to the PAL region in mid-2015. World Record: A total of three versions of the game have been submitted by players from various countries to the Guinness World Records. No explanation on who submitted the versions is available however. After experiencing the positive feedback from the beta version which got a nomination for "Best Handheld Game" at the Spike Video Game Awards 2016, Apotheon made its way to PlayStation 4. Along with a number of improvements such as higher resolution (including 4K), improved controls, a revamped worldmap and a shorter loading time, the game got an

#W101 Q: What's using a lot of my hard drive space? - I think I know the answer. Is there any way to delete it? I bought a new HD a couple of months ago. When it came time to partition it, I just left it alone. Now I find that my HD is probably only using about 27% storage. I want to delete something and free up space (I already did this once, but forgot to tell you - it's a photo album and it didn't actually go into the Recycle Bin, so I'm sure it's deleting itself). I looked in the Event Viewer, but there's not a whole lot, mainly stuff from the stock programs that were on the machine before I installed Ubuntu. When I browse the Recycle Bin as well, I don't see anything with dates or user names or anything like that. What could be wasting the space? If there isn't any, is there any way to find out why, and/or delete it? EDIT: I've attached my two screenshots (there's a lot of 'Unknown' and/or 'Unspecified' but this is only really a problem with the system partition). A: Your Windows install disk may have Recovery CDs/DVDs/DVDs that you can install which will allow to completely remove the installation from your PC.
