Photography and image editing are a creative process. Photography involves more than being able to capture a subject. As a photographer, you have to be able to create images that look good. An image that is not natural or pleasing to the eye may create an impact on how much work customers purchase your services. Photoshop's History Photoshop is part of Adobe's Creative Suite, which also includes Adobe Dreamweaver, Adobe InDesign, Adobe Illustrator, Adobe Flash, Adobe Media Encoder, and Adobe Portable Document Format (PDF). Adobe Photoshop debuted in 1992 as part of Adobe Photoshop System version 1.0. It has been evolving ever since. In 2003, the company launched Photoshop CS, which was followed by Photoshop CS2 in 2005. These versions brought many new and improved features to Photoshop, including the ability to selectively adjust colors in an image. In 2009, Photoshop CS3 became available. This update focused on improving the speed of the programs performance. The latest version of Photoshop is currently available in five variants: CS6, CS6 Extended, CS6 Web, CS6 Extended, and CC (Creative Cloud). All are continually updated with new features and tweaks to improve performance and add user-friendly features. Q: Is it possible to detect which iPhone or iPad the app was launched on using the iAd SDK? I know the iAd SDK is universal, but is it possible to detect which iPhone or iPad the app was launched on using the iAd SDK (assuming the publisher/developer created an iAd in Xcode)? A: No, it is not possible. You can however see the device that was used and by what method in the report.

Q: AngularJS $http.get() data always returns [object Object] I have checked the SO answer of similar question here: AngularJS - data is always a [object Object] I have a controller that calls another service for database connection and query, then it calls an $http.get(...) which should return the data. For me, it always returns [object Object]. I've tried to use this: this.find = function(id){ var data = $http.get(...); data.success(function(data) { console.log(data); alert(data); }); } I've tried to set the dataType to "json" and I've tried to set the responseType to "json". Here is the code for the get request: $scope.find = function(id){ $http.get('/find/', {

Q: Is it possible to hide an image with a custom height and width but with an aspect ratio of 1:1 I want to hide an image with a custom height and width but keep the aspect ratio of 1:1. This is what I have tried so far. However this is not working... $('#'+id_1).css('visibility', 'hidden'); $('#'+id_2).css('visibility', 'visible'); A: Use CSS3 to define height and width using percentage. It will make your image look like when you change the height/width to suit your content and give the aspect ratio of the image accordingly Example: img { height: 100%; width: 100%; } #...{ height: 100%; width: 100%; } #...{ width:400px; height:200px; } Finch P.
